About CHEP

Each year, the annual Conference on Higher Education Pedagogy (CHEP) welcomes over 450 faculty and instructors in Higher Education dedicated to teaching excellence. Participants showcase the best pedagogical practice and research in higher education today. Sessions address disciplinary and interdisciplinary instructional strategies, outcomes, and research. Ultimately, the conference is an opportunity to demonstrate effective instructional practice and disseminate the latest research aimed at improving the quality of higher education.

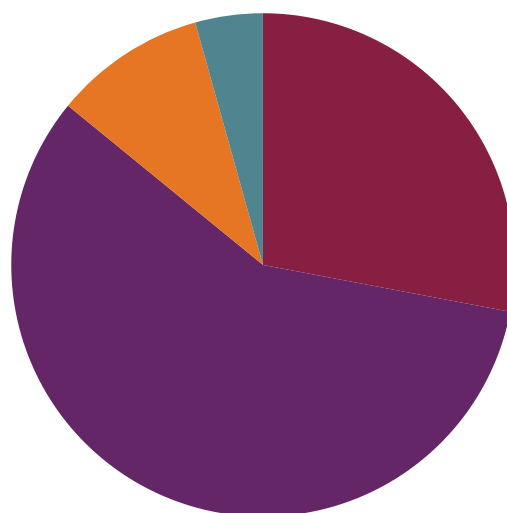

Benefits for Sponsors

Sponsors at all levels have the opportunity to participate in and display materials at CHEP, be listed in the program, and have a link on the Conference website. Be a part of this event where over 450 faculty and instructors from institutions across the world come together in a dedicated mission to teaching excellence!

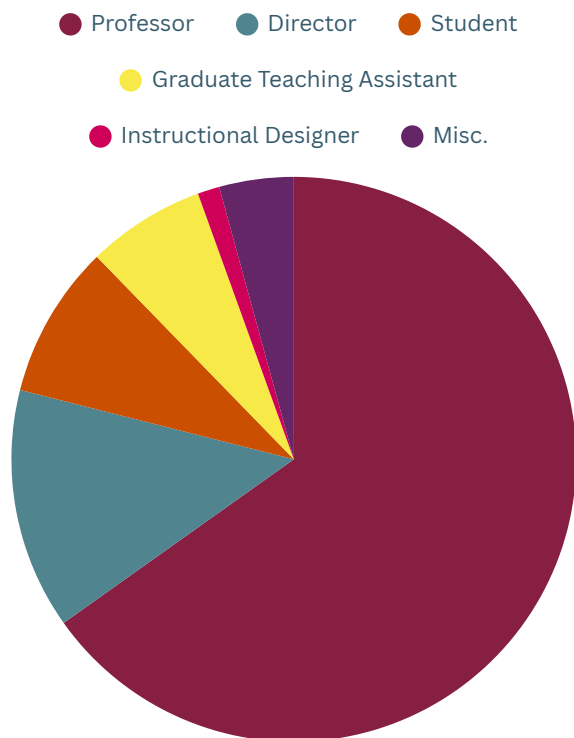

Who attends CHEP

In 2025, we welcomed roughly 460 instructors, faculty members, and graduate students to our conference. Over half of the conference attendees were from outside institutions, and forty percent of participants attended the conference for the first time.

● Virginia Tech Faculty ● Non-VT Faculty
● Virginia Tech Students ● Non-VT Students

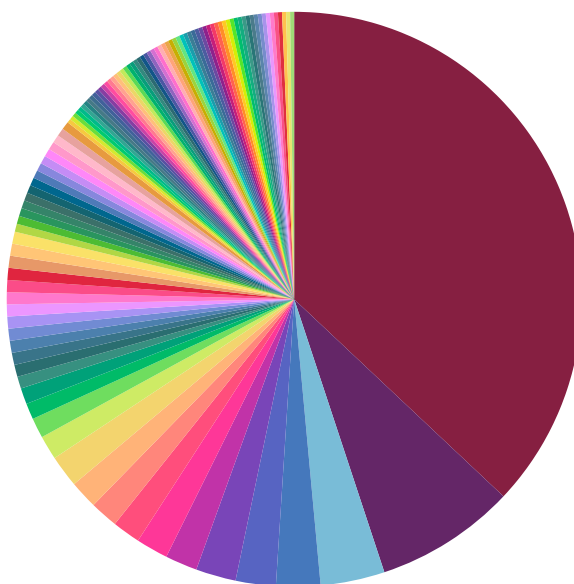

Titles of Attendees

The majority of conference attendees are teaching faculty. While roughly two-thirds of the individuals who attended CHEP 2025 were in the teaching space as instructors, we also hosted those that were in leadership positions for teaching focused centers, graduate students who were presenting their research, instructional designers, program coordinators, and academic advisors.

Schools Represented

We are proud to share that we had over 110 schools represented at CHEP 2025. The majority of schools represented were located in Virginia or neighboring states. Last year, we welcomed conference attendees from as far as The University of Alaska, Cardiff University, and University of California, Merced.
